TEACHING ENGLISH AS A SECOND LANGUAGE

Some of our language teachers are also professional interpreters or translators. TFLI completes thousands of interpretation and translation assignments every year.

In Our Classes

Real-life Contexts

Teaching within a framework of familiar situations helps you understand what is being taught and remember what you are learning where it counts most: in the real world!

Audio and Video Activities

These activities help you "tune your ears" to a variety of voices and accents, and allow authentic exposure to the culture and language you are learning. Combining text and visuals with audio leads to a more enriching and effective learning experience.

Pair and Group Activities

Using the language to communicate with others helps you become a confident speaker and listener who uses the language fluently.

Games and Movement

Adding physical activity and fun to the learning process improves retention of new language. It may seem like fun and games, but the cognitive benefits cannot be ignored.

The Learner's Role

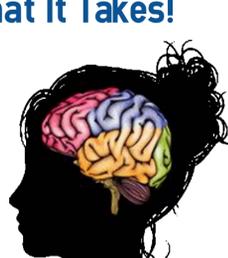

Do Your Part

Participate fully and enjoy the language learning process. Do your assigned homework, and create daily learning opportunities outside of class. It takes hundreds of hours to master a second language, so get started now and stick with it!

You Have What It Takes!

The human brain is unique in its capacity for language learning. No matter your age, you can learn to communicate in a second language. It takes time, motivation, and a brain-compatible learning strategy. We applaud your determination to enrich your life by learning another language!

About Our Approach

Methodology

The TFLI Method of language instruction incorporates the most effective techniques from several language teaching strategies and applies recent findings in the fields of applied linguistics and neurolinguistics. This method promotes effective communicative language skills at every level of instruction and for every learning preference.

What about traditional methods?

Traditional methods emphasize language analysis, not language use. Grammar-Translation, for example, was the way of learning classical Latin and ancient Greek. This method has failed many learners in high school and college modern language classes. Popular language learning software is designed similarly and gives similar results. While there is a place for some analysis tasks in the classroom, the techniques in our classes are proven to be most effective for learners of every age whose aim is to understand and be understood.
